DARBY-TP B. O. CROSSING WILL BE ELIMINATED

Dangerous Grade Crossing At Era, Long Death Spot, To Be No More.

An extensive effort of citizens in Pickaway and Madison-co's to have the dangerous grade crossing at Era, Darby-twp, eliminated has at last brought fruit with the announcement that the Baltimore and Ohio railroad company will co-operate with the state highway department in eliminating the grade crossing.

The crossing is on the Three C highway and is very dangerous.

Following conferences on this matter between representatives of the state highway department and railway officials a plan has been worked out, it is said, whereby the state and the railway company bear the heavy part of the expense of making the change and Madison and Pickaway-cos in which the changes are to be made, take care of part of the cost of some new road construction.

This dangerous crossing has been a source of annoyance to motorists and to the state department for years and under the efforts of present state highway department officials strong pressure was brought to bear on the railway company to co-operate in an improvement which would eliminate this crossing.

The plan to be followed, according to meager details coming from the state highway department provides for some new road construction. This will start in the hamlet of Era, near the church on the highway, about 500 feet south of the north end of the brick paving. From this point a new road will be constructed to the left of the present road and a new overhead highway bridge will be constructed near the elevator at Era. This new road will continue onward for about three quarters of a mile to the county road which leads directly into Mt. Sterling, joining the Three C Highway at the first curve the other side of Mt. Sterling toward Era.

This new road also will eliminate several bad curves in the Three C highway between Mt. Sterling and the Era crossing and will be a big improvement in one of the most dangerous pieces of roadway on this highway. The present roadbed will remain intact to be used while the new paving and bridge are under construction.

According to highway officials work on this improvement is to begin at once as most of the plans have been made and it is expected to have the entire work completed within a year.

COPS ABANDON SILENCE, WILL WAR ON GANGS

Detroit Has Eleventh Gang Victim in 12 Days—Begin Roundup of Toughs.

DETROIT, July 16—Just a few minutes after a high police official declared that "the underworld mobs are running wild," the bullet-riddled body of a supposed gangster was found on the East Side here today and the eleventh gangland murder in 12 days was written into police records.

Five bullets have been pumped into the man's body. Police said that the man had been "taken for a ride' 'and his body thrown into the streets.

Abandoning their disinterested attitude under the pressure of public opinion, police started a drive against gangland late yesterday afternoon. Ten suspects have been rounded up. They include Peter Licavoli, imported St. Louis and Chicago gunman, and Jack Belford, alias John Harrison, who allegedly is wanted in Brooklyn, N. Y., on a 14-year-old murder charge.

"FIGHT IT OUT"

Although police had previously stated that they would let the gangsters "fight it out" because "such deaths were no loss to the community," one of the greatest drives against the underworld in the history of the city is being planned, it was learned.

The wild revel of killings started just 12 days ago when William Cannon and George Collins were "put on the spot" in front of a local hotel. Police described them as petty Chicago racketeers and said that the men "chisled" $2,500 from a "blind-pig" operator who had already been paying tribute to another "mob."

Patrolman Barney Roth and John Meitz, the latter a bootlegger, were shot and killed when two gunmen invaded Roth's Hamtramck home three days later. These were followed by another dual slaying with the daylight slaying of Joseph and Samuel Gagilo, Italian brother-operators of a liquor cutting plant.

Gangland guns barked five other times and claimed as many victims So ruthlessly and quickly did the assassains work that only one of the victim had a chance to draw a gun. The one shot he was able to fire went wild, wounding a bystander in the hand.

WITNESSES SILENT

Police say that Licavoli, ex-convict of the Illinois state penitentiary, was the "trigger-man" in two of the slayings The authorities were confronted with an obstacle today, however, because of the absence of witnesses or the reticence of those witnesses who did appear. Though promised full police protection, they refused to talk, fearing that gangland's code of: "Death to the squealer" may be executed.

CHAMPION BOY FLIER FIGHTS FOR HIS LIFE

Physicians Say Goldsborough's Condition Is "Extremely Serious."

BULLETIN

BENNINGTON, Vt., July 16 —Although Frank Goldsborough still clung tenacious to life today his slim hold on existence may slip at any time, hospital reports stated.

"He is still alive, but there appears to be little or no hope," was the brief report.

For a while last night hope was held out for the eventual recovery of the boy aviator, who was found after a long search pinned in the wreckage of his plane which had crashed into the side of Sucker Pond Mountain five miles from here. But this morning his brief rally ended and he became weaker.

BENNINGTON, Vt., July 16—Frank Goldsborough, America's champion boy flyer, still battled bravely for his life today.

At Putnam Memorial Hospital here, where he was brought yesterday from Green Mountain peak after he was seriously injured in the crash of his plane, the 19-year-old aviator was reported this morning as having a "fighting chance" to live.

He passed a fairly comfortable night, physicans said. During most of the time he has been unconscious, regaining consciousness for a few moments and then lapsing into a coma.

He was visited in the hospital last night following his operation for a fractured skull, by his mother, Mrs Gertrude Goldsborough, widow of Brice Goldsborough, the flyer who was lost while he was attempting to span the Atlantic from Newfoundland and in the illfated plane "Dawn." Mrs. Goldsborough did not remain in the hospital all night but was to visit Frank this morning.

CONDITION SERIOUS

When the boy's plane fell after striking a tree in heavy fog, a fractured skull was the only major injury which was sustained by Goldsborough, but the long hours of exposure that passed following the crash Monday and finding of the wrecked plane early Tuesday made his condition critical, doctors said. Donald Mockler, flying to Keene, N. H., with Goldsborough, to keep a lecture engagement, escaped with minor injuries.

Mockler said he had been thrown clear when the plane had the wings torn off and it struck a tree and then crashed on the rocks on the side of the mountain. Goldsborough had been thrown forward in the metal rear cockpit. Goldsborough's head, his friend said, had struck the cockpit wall and he was rendered unconscious Mockler struggled for hours to release him and then sent for aid

SAVED LIVES

Mockler said the keen forsight of the youth, who holds the junior transcontinental flight record, in turning off the plane's engine just as it crashed, probably saved both of their lives as it prevented the ship from catching fire

Supporters of Administration Warn Hoover Something Must Be Done.

WASHINGTON, July 16 — The bitter battles that Calvin Coolidge fought with Congress over the equalization fee principle in farm relief probably will have to be fought all over again by Herbert Hoover, it appeared today.

The agricultural bill enacted by the first Hoover Congress for relief of the farmer having failed to relieve, the White House was fairly flooded today with warnings that unless there is a marked recovery in wheat prices before December the equalization fee plan is going to be revived and fought to a finish.

SUPPORTERS WARN

The warnings came from the chief supporters of the administration who are in touch with the situation in the wheat belt, among them Secretary of Agriculture Arthur M Hyde, Senator Arthur Capper of Kansas, and Senator McNary (R) of Oregon, who helped father the plan.

Hyde returned yesterday from a tour of the grain belt with Alex Legge, chairman of the federal farm board and reported to the cabinet that the situation was acute and serious, and that many farmers are turning to the equalization fee as the only salvation."

Both McNary and Capper declared that powerful farm organizations are already lining up for a revival of the fight.

Congress twice approved the equalization fee and President Coolidge twice vetoed it with stinging messages. He denounced it as "economically unsound," as "indefensible," and as a raid on the federal treasury. At the time, President Hoover, then Secretary of Commerce, was reported to have helped in the forming of the veto messages.

MADE AN ISSUE

It was made an issue in the presidential campaign of 1928. Mr. Hoover publicly opposed it Governor Smith, his opponent, never endorsed it by name, although he did in principle. Smith characterized it as a plan to extend the benefits of the tariff to the farmer that was worthy of consideration.

President Hoover is deeply concerned with the situation. He has discussed it with most of the western senators remaining in Washington, and has called in Julius Barnes, and others who are considered authorities.

What can be done about it, however, is not apparent. The president has put his foot down on the Capper-Allen proposal to have the grain stablization corporation buy 100,000,000 bushels of wheat in the current market, although the price is only about 75 cents a bushel as compared with the $1.15-$1.20 a bushel which the corporation paid for 60,000,000 bushels some months ago as a market stablizer.

Capper, however, has not yet given up the idea of the board's going into the market.

CAN'T LOSE MONEY

"The government," he said, "cannot possibly lose any money by buying wheat at 60 cents a bushel, which is the price many producers are getting at the elevators. Certainly there is more reason to buy wheat now than there was months ago.

"If the present situation endures until December there is no doubt whatever that there will be a strong and concerted movement in favor of the debenture or equalization fee plans The west is disturbed and rightly so."

At Putnam Memorial Hospital here, where he was brought yesterday from Green Mountain peak after he was seriously injured in the crash of his plane, the 19-year-old aviator was reported this morning as having a "fighting chance" to live.

He passed a fairly comfortable night, physicans said. During most of the time he has been unconscious, regaining consciousness for a few moments and then lapsing into a coma.

He was visited in the hospital last night following his operation for a fractured skull, by his mother, Mrs. Gertrude Goldsborough, widow of Brice Goldsborough, the flyer who was lost while he was attempting to span the Atlantic from Newfoundland and in the illfated plane "Dawn." Mrs. Goldsborough did not remain in the hospital all night but was to visit Frank this morning.

CONDITION SERIOUS

When the boy's plane fell after striking a tree in heavy fog, a fractured skull was the only major injury which was sustained by Goldsborough, but the long hours of exposure that passed following the crash Monday and finding of the wrecked plane early Tuesday made his condition critical, doctors said. Donald Mockler, flying to Keene, N. H., with Goldsborough, to keep a lecture engagement, escaped with minor injuries.

Mockler said he had been thrown clear when the plane had the wings torn off and it struck a tree and then crashed on the rocks on the side of the mountain. Goldsborough had been thrown forward in the metal rear cockpit. Goldsborough's head, his friend said, had struck the cockpit wall and he was rendered unconscious. Mockler struggled for hours to release him and then sent for aid.

SAVED LIVES

Mockler said the keen forsight of the youth, who holds the junior transcontinental flight record, in turning off the plane's engine just as it crashed, probably saved both of their lives as it prevented the ship from catching fire.

Supporters of Administration Warn Hoover Something Must Be Done.

WASHINGTON, July 16—The bitter battles that Calvin Coolidge fought with Congress over the equalization fee principle in farm relief probably will have to be fought all over again by Herbert Hoover, it appeared today.

The agricultural bill enacted by the first Hoover Congress for relief of the farmer having failed to relieve, the White House was fairly flooded today with warnings that unless there is a marked recovery in wheat prices before December the equalization fee plan is going to be revived and fought to a finish.

SUPPORTERS WARN

The warnings came from the chief supporters of the administration who are in touch with the situation in the wheat belt, among them Secretary of Agriculture Arthur M. Hyde, Senator Arthur Capper of Kansas, and Senator McNary (R) of Oregon, who helped father the plan.

Hyde returned yesterday from a tour of the grain belt with Alex Legge, chairman of the federal farm board and reported to the cabinet that the situation was acute and serious, and that many farmers are turning to the equalization fee as the only salvation."

Both McNary and Capper declared that powerful farm organizations are already lining up for a revival of the fight.

Congress twice approved the equalization fee and President Coolidge twice vetoed it with stinging messages. He denounced it as "economically unsound," as "indefensible," and as a raid on the federal treasury. At the time, President Hoover, then Secretary of Commerce, was reported to have helped in the forming of the veto messages.

MADE AN ISSUE

It was made an issue in the presidential campaign of 1928. Mr. Hoover publicly opposed it. Governor Smith, his opponent, never endorsed it by name, although he did in principle. Smith characterized it as a plan to extend the benefits of the tariff to the farmer that was worthy of consideration.

President Hoover is deeply concerned with the situation. He has discussed it with most of the western senators remaining in Washington, and has called in Julius Barnes, and others who are considered authorities.

What can be done about it, however, is not apparent. The president has put his foot down on the Capper-Allen proposal to have the grain stablization corporation buy 100,000,000 bushels of wheat in the current market, although the price is only about 75 cents a bushel as compared with the $1.15-$1.20 a bushel which the corporation paid for 60,000,000 bushels some months ago as a market stablizer.

Capper, however, has not yet given up the idea of the board's going into the market.

CAN'T LOSE MONEY

"The government," he said, "cannot possibly lose any money by buying wheat at 60 cents a bushel, which is the price many producers are getting at the elevators. Certainly there is more reason to buy wheat now than there was months ago.

"If the present situation endures until December there is no doubt whatever that there will be a strong and concerted movement in favor of the debenture or equalization fee plans. The west is disturbed and rightly so."

LUTHERANS PULL SURPRISE DEFEATING GORDON OUTFIT 4-3 IN EXCITING CONTEST

The Lutheran Erotherhood pulled one of the surprises in rec circles Tuesday evening when they defeated the Gordon Tires, winners of the first round, and who up to this time have been "unconquerable." The score was 4 to 3.

This defeat now places the tiremen in a tie for first place with Doggy Ward's who defeated Pettit-Sinclair's Tuesday.

The game played at Mason's was very exciting and thrilling, and very few errors were recorded on the part of either team.

The Lutherans came to the bat in the third and started swatting the pill, and finally loaded the bases. Then the next batter stepped to the plate and laid a beautiful hit into the outfield and brought one run across the plate. Then the next man on third was driven in, and the score was 4 to 0.

The Gordon's were unable to score until the eighth inning, when they garnered their three runs. In this inning the score could have been tied and possibly won, but the pitcher hurled a ball and hit the umpire who called it a dead ball, the tire men argued it was a passed ball and they were entitled to their run, however Sherd Boyer did not see the play in that fashion and no other runs than their first three were scored.

The Lutherans had scored their other two runs in the seventh which won the game, and brought them up to fourth place in the league standing.

These runs were also obtained through nice clean hits, and finally several nice long drives brought two men across the rubber and the score was 4 to 3.

As has been said the game was exciting and very interesting. Hits were well scattered as also were the very few errors. Roy Dumm and Tubby Vlerebome both pitched good ball, and were given fine support by their respective teams.

These churchmen look good for this last round and these other teams better watch them or they will find themselves defeated some of these days when they least expect it.

"KONJOLA PROVED BLESSING IN MY STUBBORN CASE"

Retired Soldier Says He Cannot Praise New and Different Medicine Too Highly.

MR. HENRY FAULKNER.

What mightier recommendation can a medicine have than the grateful words of those who, to their everlasting joy, put it to the test. Read the grateful statement of Mr. Henry Faulkner, Company 3, Soldiers' Home, Dayton, Ohio, who says:

"Konjola certainly proved a blessing in my stubborn case, bringing relief after all else had failed for stomach and kidney troubles and nervousness. After every meal came gas and bloating, my back ached and every night I had to get up frequently because of the kidney condition. Konjola was so strongly recommended that I decided to give this new medicine a trial. Today I feel like a new man, able to eat anything I want. My nerves are quiet and I sleep well. I will always be a friend of Konjola."

Though Konjola does go swiftly to the very source of the ills it is designed to combat, a full treatment of from six to eight bottles is strongly recommended.

Konjola is sold in Circleville at Hamilton & Ryan's drug store, and by all the best druggists in all towns throughout this entire section.—Adv.

WEIGHT MAY HURT CHAMP

Sammy Mandell Having Tough Time To Get Down To 135 Pounds For Tilt.

NEW YORK, July 16 — Sometimes an innocent set of scales—inanimate and guileless to the eye, but arrogant in its judgments and, as the death notice, final—can look the part of a gallows. Often the tape measure is a hangman's noose and the glass of water a nectar, brewed by the medici. Anyhow, they say that Sammy Mandell, the lightweight champion, either will make the class limit of 135 pounds for his championship fight with Al Singer tomorrow night by heroic measures or he wont make it at all.

They say the spectre of forfeiture on the scales is mocking his thoughts and deriding his sleep. They say the closest decision ever rendered for or against him will be handed down at the official weigh-in at 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon. Thus, he would seem to be undergoing the grim ordeal that so often has overtaken champions in the past. Gans, for example, left his life on the scales at Goldfield.

Mandell weighed 137 1-2 pounds less than three days ago and this would have been quite as it should be, except for one thing. The extra weight, they say, represents the "case" two pounds, meaning that there just isn't any more. After these are chivvied away, it seems, the only thing left for the man to take off will be his shoes before going to bed.

WARD'S PLAY GOOD BALL TO WIN FROM PETTIT-SINCLAIR

Red Owens Hurls Shutout Until His Team Has Good Lead—Butler's Play on First Sack Stands Out For Deputy's Outfit—Score Is 7-2.

A three run lead which they acquired in the first inning, when they saw their opponents could not handle the ball, won a ball game for Doggy Ward's from the Pettit Sinclair team at Utilities park Tuesday evening. The score was 7 to 2.

In the first session the Wardmen stepped to the bat and started swatting the pill over the entire field, and the tire and oil boys muffed the ball plenty.

The Pettit aggregation garnered its two runs in the eighth inning, when a Ward infielder made a bad over-throw to third and H. White and Boone Pettit scored two runs.

The oil men were unable to score at any other time, even though they had many chances but generally when a safety meant something they were helpless. In the fifth inning, the bases were loaded and in many other instances a man was placed on second and third, but was unable to score.

The Wardmen then followed with their four runs, one in the third, one in the fourth and two in the fifth. One cause of these was the fact that the Pettit short-stop muffed about four balls that came his way, and in some cases they would roll through the left fielder's hands.

Buck Hutchinson, Ward short-stop, also muffed four balls, but the rest of the team played such tight ball that no runs were scored through these errors.

Butler, on first base for the Wardmen, played what could almost be called super-human rec ball as many times he would go 20 or 30 feet out of his way to make a put out, and in other cases he would scoop them off the ground.

All in all the deputy's boys played one of the best games they have shown this season.

Red Owens, moundman for the winners, had two strike-outs and allowed one man to walk, while Howard White for the losers had no strike-outs or allowed no free bases.

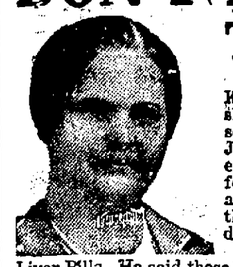
DON'T BE A SLAVE TO LAXATIVES



Mrs. E. Gebbard, 301 W. 5th St., Newport, Ky., says, "My husband and I were actually slaves to laxatives, continually dosing ourselves with something to relieve constipation. Just couldn't stop. It got to be a habit. We even gave our children laxatives in candy form. Little did we realize that we were only aggravating and not reaching the cause of the constipation. Headaches, biliousness, indigestion and constipation still continued.

Our druggist recommended Carter's Little Liver Pills. He said these little vegetable pills would tone up the liver, stir up the bile, which, acting as an antiseptic, keeps the food from rotting, and poisoning the blood. They are not habit forming and thoroughly cleanse the upper and lower bowel. Laxatives fail to do this." Carter's Little Liver Pills are sold at all Druggists in 25c red paper pkgs.

"KONJOLA PROVED BLESSING IN MY STUBBORN CASE"

Retired Soldier Says He Cannot Praise New and Different Medicine Too Highly.

MR. HENRY FAULKNER.

What mightier recommendation can a medicine have than the grateful words of those who, to their everlasting joy, put it to the test. Read the grateful statement of Mr. Henry Faulkner, Company 3, Soldiers' Home, Dayton, Ohio, who says:

"Konjola certainly proved a blessing in my stubborn case, bringing relief after all else tried for stomach and kidney troubles and nervousness. After every meal came gas and bloating; my back ached and every night I had to get up frequently because of the kidney condition. Konjola was so strongly recommended that I decided to give this new medicine a trial. Today I feel like a new man, able to eat anything I want. My nerves are quiet and I sleep well. I will always be a friend of Konjola."

Though Konjola does go swiftly to the very source of the ills it is designed to combat, a full treatment of from six to eight bottles is strongly recommended.

Konjola is sold in Circleville at Hamilton & Ryan's drug store, and by all the best druggists in all towns throughout this entire section.—Adv.

WEIGHT MAY HURT CHAMP

Sammy Mandell Having Tough Time To Get Down To 135 Pounds For Tilt.

NEW YORK, July 16 — Sometimes an innocent set of scales—inanimate and guileless to the eye, but arrogant in its judgments and, as the death notice, final—can look the part of a gallows. Often the tape measure is a hangman's noose and the glass of water a nectar, brewed by the medici. Anyhow, they say that Sammy Mandell, the lightweight champion, either will make the class limit of 135 pounds for his championship fight with Al Singer tomorrow night by heroic measures or he wont make it at all.

They say the spectre of forfeiture on the scales is mocking his thoughts and deriding his sleep. They say the closest decision ever rendered for or against him will be handed down at the official weigh-in at 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon. Thus, he would seem to be undergoing the grim ordeal that so often has overtaken champions in the past. Gans, for example, left his life on the scales at Goldfield.

Mandell weighed 137 1-2 pounds less than three days ago and this would have been quite as it should be, except for one thing. The extra weight, they say, represents the "case" two pounds, meaning that there just isn't any more. After these are chivvied away, it seems, the only thing left for the man to take off will be his shoes before going to bed.

Red Owens Hurls Shutout Until His Team Has Good Lead—Butler's Play on First Sack Stands Out For Deputy's Outfit—Score Is 7-2.

A three run lead which they acquired in the first inning, when they saw their opponents could not handle the ball, won a ball game for Doggy Ward's from the Pettit Sinclair team at Utilities park Tuesday evening. The score was 7 to 2.

In the first session the Wardmen stepped to the bat and started swatting the pill over the entire field, and the tire and oil boys muffed the ball plenty.

The Pettit aggregation garnered its two runs in the eighth inning, when a Ward infielder made a bad over-throw to third and H. White and Boone Pettit scored two runs.

The oil men were unable to score at any other time, even though they had many chances but generally when a safety meant something they were helpless. In the fifth inning, the bases were loaded and in many other instances a man was placed on second and third, but was unable to score.

The Wardmen then followed with their four runs, one in the third, one in the fourth and two in the fifth. One cause of these was the fact that the Pettit short-stop muffed about four balls that came his way, and in some cases they would roll through the left fielder's hands.

Buck Hutchinson, Ward shortstop, also muffed four balls, but the rest of the team played such tight ball that no runs were scored through these errors.

Butler, on first base for the Wardmen, played what could almost be called super-human rec ball as many times he would go 20 or 30 feet out of his way to make a put out, and in other cases he would scoop them off the ground.

All in all the deputy's boys played one of the best games they have shown this season.

Red Owens, moundman for the winners, had two strike-outs and allowed one man to walk, while Howard White for the losers had no strike-outs or allowed no free bases.

DON'T BE A SLAVE TO LAXATIVES

Mrs. E. Gebbard, 301 W. 5th St., Newport, Ky., says, "My husband and I were actually slaves to laxatives, continually dosing ourselves with something to relieve constipation. Just couldn't stop. It got to be a habit. We even gave our children laxatives in candy form. Little did we realize that we were only aggravating and not reaching the cause of the constipation. Headaches, biliousness, indigestion and constipation still continued.

Our druggist recommended Carter's Little Liver Pills. He said these little vegetable pills would tone up the liver, stir up the bile, which, acting as an antiseptic, keeps the food from rotting, and poisoning the blood. They are not habit forming and thoroughly cleanse the upper and lower bowel. Laxatives fail to do this." Carter's Little Liver Pills are sold at all Druggists in 25c red paper pkgs.

HEREAFTER

Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, author and spiritualist, said before his death:

"I expect to talk it all over with Houdini before very long. I view the prospect with perfect equanimity. That is what psychic research does for one."

Will Rogers, friend of all the world, remarks that while many laugh at the spiritualists, "they go mighty peaceful and happy."

Perhaps any faith that can soften the fear of death without interfering unduly with life is good, whether it be literally true or not.

This much, at least, must be said for spiritualism — that it is founded on a deep instinct animating most of mankind. We are naturally inclined to believe in a life after physical death. We differ mainly in our notions of what kind of life it will be.

There are those who say that all the creeds and philosophies are right—that mental outlook in this life determines the character of the next life for every individual. Thus the Christian will have his heaven, the Mohammedan his paradise, the Buddhist his nirvana, etc. Even the non-believing materialist will be justified in a sense, spending the next stage of existence in complete unconsciousness.

This view at least makes for tolerance. And if it is true, nobody has any right to complain.

TEMPERATE GERMANS

Germany used to be known as the land of heavy drinkers. Now, writes an American correspondent from Berlin, Germany is "going dry." She is far from that consummation yet—probably farther than America. But the trend is strong.

It is a curious situation. There is no prohibition movement there. There is not even any temperance movement worthy of the name. Yet the consumption of spirituous liquors has fallen off considerably, beer is no longer one of the staple necessaries of life, and wine merchants and growers complain of a big slump in their business. People have taken to drinking mineral waters, carbonated drinks with malt flavors or even milder beverages.

The new temperance is said to be due mainly to the popularity of sports. When Germans drank heavily there were no sports, even in universities. Now that there are sports, there is no desire for alcohol.

Of course sport and booze don't mix. Even beer loses popularity with young Germans, because they say it makes them soft and flabby.

There may be a practical application of the principle here in America. To make people voluntarily temperate, get them interested in sports—genuine athletic sports in which they really participate instead of merely looking on.

FEWER LAWS

During the congressional session just ended there were introduced in the House 8,229 bills and resolutions. If you think this is a good many, just consider the fact that in the first regular session of the preceding Congress the representatives dumped into the hopper 14,143 bills and resolutions.

Here is a decrease of nearly 6,000, which makes a notable gain. Let the next Congress make as good ashowing and the number of measures submitted for consideration will be reduced to a mere couple of thousand. That would mean far more careful consideration, far less wear and tear on the lawmakers, far less false hope and fear on the part of the public, and a higher quality of legislation.

A candidate for the legislature in Ohio is running on a platform of two words, "Fewer Laws." He ought to win.

RATIFYING THE TREATY

The United States Senate, back in hot Washington to finish a job it failed to do in regular session seems to have no recourse but to buckle down and do it as expeditiously as possible.

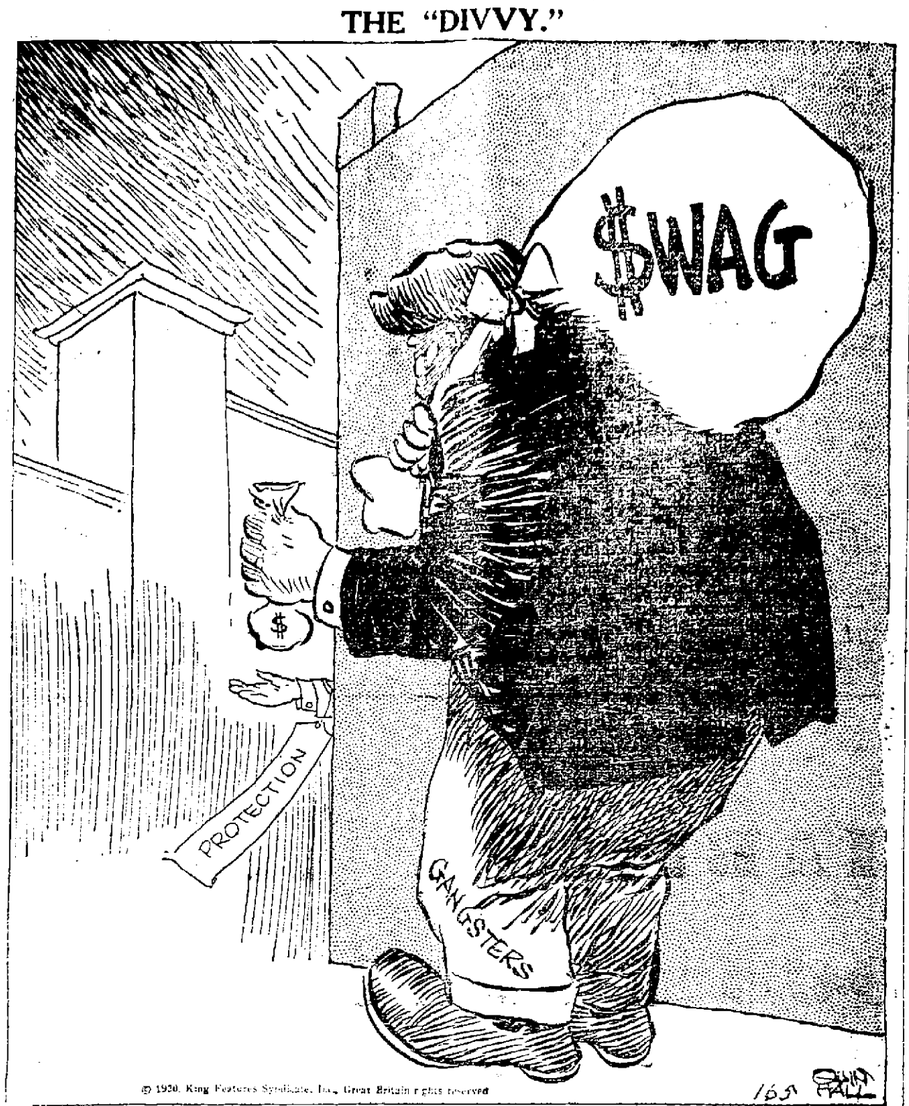
Wilful absence will do no good. The London Treaty will not be killed by lack of quorum. Administration leaders say they will see that there is enough attendance for the transaction of business if they have to send sergeants-at-arms to the senators' homes and drag them back.

Such compulsion is so painful to senatorial pride that the mere threat is probably enough. And to tell the truth, the senators have little or nothing to gain by procrastination. They might as well ratify that treaty now as at any time. They don't have to talk all summer if they don't want to.

Many people wonder how Iceland got along for 1,000 years without a navy. Maybe the peculiar process of just minding its own business.

We all have our own ideas of fame, and maybe in the final accounting all ways are figureable, but two that never appeared to us as mattering much are flagpole-sitting and going over Niagara Falls in a barrel.

THE "DIVVY."



"WHERE'S EMILY?"
by CAROLYN WELLS

CHAPTER XXX.

BUT Sayre had a fine sense of the courtesy due a party invited to Knollwood, and he proposed that so far as it lay in his power he would keep up the dignity of the place and its traditions of hospitality.

Aunt Judy was not enough to offer to the guests, they must have every responsible member of the family available.

And a sort of noblesse oblige made Rodney feel that he must stand as representative of the family and the house with which he expected to be affiliated.

So he had steeled himself to this ordeal, and proposed to carry it through at any cost to his own feelings or nerves.

It would be idle to say that Hilldale was not stirred to its foundations by the tragic occurrences. They might go calmly to the church, politely to call at Knollwood, sedately leave cards at The Ravines, silently attend the inquest, but at home, behind closed doors, human nature forced itself to the front and speculation was rife, while theories were plentiful as blackberries.

Opinions ran the whole gamut of possibilities, from the martyrdom of Emily to her blackest guilt. From a pitched battle between the two high-tempered friends to the onslaught of a carload of bandits terrible as any army with banners.

But these conversations came not to the ears of the Knollwood people, for Hilldale was discreet before all else, and its attitude was entirely that of sympathy and condolence, with a due admixture of hope.

And so, the wedding party took place.

Determination on the part of all the household made it seem a mere reception or fete, without bridal significance.

At noon, as Emily had not returned, Aunt Judy took her place as receiving hostess and greeted the inrush of guests with a smile.

No explanations were needed, they all understood. Hilldale was quick to take a cue, and their murmured greetings were befitting and pleasant.

Spinks was in his element. Often he had engineered a wedding, but never one like this, which, lacking bridal party entirely, was left to him to save from ignominious disaster.

And he did his part. He ordered the feast served at the psychological moment. He organized the music of the right sort and at the right time. He planned the decorations, having removed the white satin bows with their great sheaves of lilies, which, incidentally he ordered sent to the hospital, in accordance with Hilldale tradition.

He [illegible] conducted downcast [illegible] Aunt Judy's sitting room, which had been converted into a [illegible] rest of place.

And [illegible] with the [illegible] Aunt Judy [illegible] to entertain the guests [illegible] old themselves [illegible]

Judge was grave, but politely [illegible] of such courtly grace and charm, that the hearts of the women went out to him and one and all sought to offer comfort.

This Sayre accepted in the most friendly way, and even the most critical of the guests finally concluded that the Knollwood people had done the best thing after all.

Aunt Judy was pathetic, yet in such a gracious, dignified way that few dared pity her.

Her attitude, like Rod's, was that Emily was mysteriously absent, and they were sorry, but nothing could be done about it at the moment.

And, after all, that was the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth.

And so the afternoon wore on. The elder people went home, but the younger crowd, having good music and good food, stayed on and on, and Aunt Judy was glad they did.

Reaction would come soon enough and she wanted Emily's friends to have a good time.

Abel Collins came to talk to her.

"You're a wonderful woman," he said. "Few could have accomplished this."

"I had to," she returned simply. "I did it for Emily. Tell, me, Abel, where do you think the child is?"

Abel Collins looked at her sharply. He feared this meant the end of enforced control of herself, and possibly a collapse.

"No," she said, reading his glance, "I'm not going to give way. Why should I? All I can possibly do to help Emily is to—keep the home fires burning. If she comes home, she must find everything in perfect order, and, if she doesn't, there's no harm done."

"You're right, you're right," Abel Collins assured her. "Now, as to where our girl is, I don't know. But I do think, Judy, that she will yet be rescued."

"You're not saying that just to comfort me?"

"Partly," he smiled. "And partly because I believe it myself. If Emily were dead, her body would have been found by this time. If she has been kidnaped, we will hear from the villains, and probably soon. Dear friend, there is nothing to do but to wait—the hardest thing, I know, but the only thing."

To Rodney Sayre, Collins said practically the same thing. It was no news to either, but there was something about Abel Collins' way of saying things that brought a hint of hope and a breath of cheer to the two sorrowing hearts.

Then Abel and Rodney took a walk about the place, looking beyond the lawns and on toward the footpath that led to the [illegible] ravine.

They talked for the most part on ordinary topics, never [illegible] the subject close to [illegible] hearts, but feeling there was little to be said about it.

They passed the Miller house, and spoke of its beauty and grandeur.

"Pennington's will be [illegible] up, too, for a time," said Abel looking at the Miller's boarder [illegible] down. "I say, Sayre, [illegible] on Jim for a minute. [illegible] pretty like the after[illegible]

"All right," Rodney [illegible] and they went on over the [illegible] and on the left to the

Although a creek [illegible] windings made the [illegible] well as picturesque, [illegible] they were halfway up [illegible] were below them and [illegible] the road was cut off.

The house, as they [illegible] looked as usual, except [illegible] or two trunks and [illegible] case were on the front [illegible]

Hearing voices, Jim [illegible] himself came to the [illegible] door. He was in his shirt sleeves, but made no apologies

"How are you?" he said, to Rodney, holding out his hand, and afterward greeting Collins. "I'm downright glad to see you. Sit down, I'll get you a bracer. I need one myself. Not that I've been working hard, my packing was easy, but——" he shrugged his shoulders and it was not hard to understand that the nerve strain of leaving his home was what had wearied him.

They sat in his pleasant living-room, every detail of which told of a woman's taste and fancies.

"I thought at first," he said, "I'd take with me everything connected with Polly—her pictures, books, music—but, Lord, it would take a van. Then I concluded to take nothing remindful of her, thought it might be better for me, but, of course, that wouldn't work either. So I'm doing what anybody would do in the circumstances, taking some things and leaving some."

"You're coming back?" said Sayre.

"Oh, yes. Excuse me just a moment," he stepped to a table, opened the drawer and disappeared from the room for a moment, then returned.

"Something I forgot to tell Rosa," he said. "Yes, I shall return, and probably soon. I thought at first I'd go away for good, but Hilldale seems like home to me, and I'm sure now I'll come back here. In fact, I don't know what I'll do until I get away and think it out. You don't know what it means to a chap who has had a home so long to suddenly find himself homeless. And I can't stay on here. These two days have nearly finished me. Everything reminds me of Polly. The very chairs and tables shriek her name at me, and I can't stand it. I'm nervous. I know, but I can't help that. So I shall go away, probably to Europe, or maybe California, but far away for a time, a few months, and then I'll come back here and sell the house or live in it, I don't know which. But I can't rent it now, or anything like that, for I would have to put away all of Polly's things, and I can't."

"I think you're doing just right, Jim," Sayre told him. "Go off as you propose, and later, you'll get a better perspective, and you'll be ready to take up your life again. Me, I don't know where I'm at."

"Of course, you don't," and Pennington spoke with utmost sympathy. "I don't see what you are going to do, Sayre. Did you get the detective you had in mind?"

"Stop? I hope to get him. I don't know for certain yet. I think now it's a case of kidnaping and I'm expecting the ransom letter any hour."

"It may be," and Pennington looked thoughtful. "I hope the police won't harp any more on the [illegible] of the fur and the diamonds [illegible] found beside Polly."

"They will, though," Abel [illegible] "And since that [illegible] been touched on, how do you explain it, Mr. Pennington?"

"[illegible] rather not put us the subject, Mr. Collins."

"Why not?" asked Rodney. "Look here, Pennington, if you know anything, out with it. You're [illegible] way——"

"Well, that may be a good thing for you all."

"I don't want a good thing [illegible] anyway. I want the truth."

DR. COPELAND SAYS—

Severe Sunburn May Lead To More Serious Trouble

—Take Summer Tan in Moderate Doses

WARNS DR. COPELAND

Accustom Your Skin Gradually to the Beneficial Rays of the Sun, Don't Overdo It, Says Authority, for in Addition to Burns Disorders May Result

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D.
United States Senator from New York.
Former Commissioner of Health, New York City.

WE are now in the midst of vacation time. Most of us are able to spend more than our usual time in the sunshine. Of course this is to be desired. Very few, especially among city dwellers, spend enough time in the sunshine.

DR. COPELAND

But we must exercise care so that the skin is not severely burned by being exposed for too long a time at first. Pretty soon your skin will adapt itself to the sunlight. Last season many young women suffered greatly due to their desire to acquire the fashionable suntan.

Not long ago I read a fashion note which stated that the backless dresses which were so popular last year would probably be less in demand. This is probably because of the suffering experienced by many women who tried to tan the skin in too short a time.

But if you do desire a tanned skin, begin temperately. If you are light complexioned you must be especially careful in order to avoid a red, unsightly looking skin.

The results of sunburn may be much more serious than the irritation of the skin. There may be fever and considerable constitutional disturbanee following a severe sunburn. As a result, your efficiency will be lowered for several days.

But if you are not seeking a deeply tanned skin, or if your skin is easily irritated, take pains for a few days and avoid trouble. It is a good plan to wear a broad-brimmed hat. Even a thin veil gives a lot of protection.

Quinine applied locally is useful. It may be prepared as a powder—one part to fifteen parts of talcum powder—and dusted on the skin. Or the quinine may be dissolved in petroleum oil and applied to exposed surfaces.

Cold cream may be used to prevent burning, also it is soothing if the skin has been burned. Do not wash after exposure to the sun. After a drive, or a half day or more on the beach, cleanse the skin with cold cream, rubbing it off gently with a soft cloth.

Whether or not you want to be tanned, accustom yourself to the sunlight because you need its healthful effect. Sunlight kills germs, enriches the blood and has a tonic effect.

Answers to Health Queries

A. E. F. Q.—I am 16 years of age, 5 ft. 10 in. tall—will I grow taller? Is there any way in which I can stop this rapid growth?

A.—You may have attained your full height, but in most cases the growth and development continue until the age of 21. There is no way to stop growing. As you grow older you will fill out and develop generally.

H. H. Q.—When I walk my knee and ankle joints make a loud crackling noise; sometimes they're painful. What can I do for it?

2. What will strengthen a weak heart?

A.—This is due to a lack of synovial fluid around the joints. There may be a rheumatic tendency at the source of the trouble. Massage and heat should give relief.

2. Proper rest and medication will help toward this end. See a doctor and follow his judgment in the matter of treatment.

• • •

A. A. Q.—What causes falling hair? There is no dandruff. What treatment is suggested?

2. What can be done for cracking or popping of the jaw and what is the cause?

A.—The trouble may be due to the health in general. Improve that and you will probably notice general results. In the meantime keep the hair and scalp immaculately clean, and use a good hair tonic.

2. This disturbance is usually due to improperly constructed dental work or to trouble with the teeth themselves. The loss of teeth often throws the jaw out of proper position. Massaging with warm cod liver oil should give relief until the cause is determined and further treatment advised.

• • •

T. B. H. Q.—How can superfluous hair be removed? Is there any chance of scarring?

2—Do you ever get over a nervous breakdown?

3—What do you advise for headaches?

A.—When the electric needle is properly used there is little danger of scarring the skin, but it must be employed by an expert. Consult a skin specialist.

2—Yes. But it takes time and careful attention to the health in general.

3—A thorough examination and a complete eye-test will usually locate the source of the trouble. Eye strain, infected teeth, tonsils and sinuses, constipation, indigestion, kidney conditions or nasal catarrh may all be responsible.

WOULD PLEDGE CONGRESSMEN TO OBEY LAW

Oklahoma Man Campaigning For Oath of Office Naming Amendment.

WASHINGTON, July 16 — A summer campaign for a new Congressional oath of office, pledging members to personal obedience of the eighteenth amendment is under way today by Representative U. S. Stone (R) of Oklahoma.

Already petitions for enactment of Stone's proposal are being circulated by many local branches of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, and ardent drys in many sections of the country have demanded their representatives in Congress to support it.

Like the movement started by Senator Sheppard (D) of Texas to make the buyer of liquor equally guilty with the seller, the Stone campaign is getting under way slowly.

But the Oklahoma member is certain that in the end he will mobilize a sentiment which will make his bill for a new oath fully as live an issue as the Sheppard proposal.

ANNOUNCES PLAN

Announcing his plan of action in an after-the-session issue of the Congressional Record, Stone said:

"The present oath was adopted before the eighteenth amendment became a part of the Constitution. Those who have little respect for the Constitution and laws of this country and who have practically no respect for the Eighteenth Amendment, do not feel bound by the present oath.

"The oath of office as at present administered is so general that it is not strictly observed and especially with reference to additional amendments which are now a part of the constitution."

Stone, who is a first termer in Congress, says his eyes were opened when he came to Washington.

"I especially wish to direct your attention to those who are being elected to office by the dry forces in this country and who vote dry but who are personally wet," he said.

"This has been brought to my attention very forceably since I have been in Washington, as I find those who parade as drys at home are very wet in Washington, D. C.

CHANGE CONDUCT

"They vote dry for public record, but in private life there is some reason to question their conduct.

"When I arrived in Washington and took over the duties of Congressman I was assigned to an office in the House Office Building, and the first act of my secretary was to wash the stickers off the large mirror which in bold letters advertises to the world a well-known brand of whiskey, a special advertised brand of gin, and an internationally known brand of brandy.

Theatres

AT THE CLIFTONA

"The Devil's Holiday," Nancy Carroll's latest starring picture, which comes to the Cliftona theatre on Wednesday, is a typical American play of modern life.

Written by Edmund Goulding, whose penchant for poignant drama is already well-established in the field of superlative movie productions, the play's action is centered in the approximate heart of the United States, namely in the middle of the great wheat-farming belt.

"The Devil's Holiday" is a study in the comparative characters of those who live in the big urban centers of the Middle West and those who gain their livelihood from the rich farmlands nearby.

Miss Carroll is the gold-digging manicurist in a big hotel who connives with crafty salesmen in "persuading" ranchers to purchase their wares. Miss Carroll vamps the business prospects from the wheat fields, gets them "that way" about her, and then the salesmen step in and highhand the deal for the sale of farm implements, tractors and other commodities.

Her game is on the "up-and-up," but it is far from straightforward. Thus engaged in amassing a fortune for herself, she meets Phillips Holmes, son of Hobart Bosworth, one of the wealthiest ranchers in the wheat country. Holmes' utter naivete captures Nancy's fancy, and she is about to toss over her "con" game for an honest love match with Holmes when James Kirkwood, his stern, older brother, steps in and brands her as a fakir who has put a love-spell on Phillips in order to marry him and get some of Bosworth's riches.

The play then sweeps through a number of high-powered emotional sequences to a powerful climax.

AT THE METROPOLITAN

When George Duryea was signed for the part of the handsome young ranch hand in "Pardon My Gun," Pathe's romantic western comedy, he stepped into the part with unusual ease.

Unlike many western screen heroes, Duryea is as much at home in the saddle as he is behind the wheel of his sport roadster. In his late teens he spent four years riding the range to regain the health he had lost while applying himself too closely to his college studies in New York.

Following his western experience, Duryea returned to New York where he embarked upon a stage career. Strange to say, he was not cast for two-gun roles, but instead, specialized in dress parts. His first screen role was that of the young reform school inmate in Cecil B. DeMille's "The Godless Girl."

AT THE GRAND

The picture is Miss Murray's first all-talkie and tells of the adventures of a dancer who was misunderstood. It is a sophisticated story of smart people.

The sixth chapter of "The Jade Box" is also on the program.

HEREAFTER

Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, author and spiritualist, said before his death:

"I expect to talk it all over with Houdini before very long. I view the prospect with perfect equanimity. That is what psychic research does for one."

Will Rogers, friend of all the world, remarks that while many laugh at the spiritualists, "they go mighty peaceful and happy."

Perhaps any faith that can soften the fear of death without interfering unduly with life is good, whether it be literally true or not.

This much, at least, must be said for spiritualism — that it is founded on a deep instinct animating most of mankind. We are naturally inclined to believe in a life after physical death. We differ mainly in our notions of what kind of life it will be.

There are those who say that all the creeds and philosophies are right—that mental outlook in this life determines the character of the next life for every individual. Thus the Christian will have his heaven, the Mohammedan his paradise, the Buddhist his nirvana, etc. Even the non-believing materialist will be justified in a sense, spending the next stage of existence in complete unconsciousness.

This view at least makes for tolerance. And if it is true, nobody has any right to complain.

TEMPERATE GERMANS

Germany used to be known as the land of heavy drinkers. Now, writes an American correspondent from Berlin, Germany is "going dry." She is far from that consummation yet—probably farther than America. But the trend is strong.

It is a curious situation. There is no prohibition movement there. There is not even any temperance movement worthy of the name. Yet the consumption of spirituous liquors has fallen off considerably, beer is no longer one of the staple necessaries of life, and wine merchants and growers complain of a big slump in their business. People have taken to drinking mineral waters, carbonated drinks with malt flavors or even milder beverages.

The new temperance is said to be due mainly to the popularity of sports. When Germans drank heavily there were no sports, even in universities. Now that there are sports, there is no desire for alcohol.

Of course sport and booze don't mix. Even beer loses popularity with young Germans, because they say it makes them soft and flabby.

There may be a practical application of the principle here in America. To make people voluntarily temperate, get them interested in sports—genuine athletic sports in which they really participate instead of merely looking on.

FEWER LAWS

During the congressional session just ended there were introduced in the House 8,229 bills and resolutions. If you think this is a good many, just consider the fact that in the first regular session of the preceding Congress the representatives dumped into the hopper 14,143 bills and resolutions.

Here is a decrease of nearly 6,000, which makes a notable gain. Let the next Congress make as good ashowing and the number of measures submitted for consideration will be reduced to a mere couple of thousand. That would mean far more careful consideration, far less wear and tear on the lawmakers, far less false hope and fear on the part of the public, and a higher quality of legislation.

A candidate for the legislature in Ohio is running on a platform of two words, "Fewer Laws." He ought to win.

RATIFYING THE TREATY

The United States Senate, back in hot Washington to finish a job it failed to do in regular session seems to have no recourse but to buckle down and do it as expeditiously as possible.

Wilful absence will do no good. The London Treaty will not be killed by lack of quorum. Administration leaders say they will see that there is enough attendance for the transaction of business if they have to send sergeants-at-arms to the senators' homes and drag them back.

Such compulsion is so painful to senatorial pride that the mere threat is probably enough. And to tell the truth, the senators have little or nothing to gain by procrastination. They might as well ratify that treaty now as at any time. They don't have to talk all summer if they don't want to.

Many people wonder how Iceland got along for 1,000 years without a navy. Maybe the peculiar process of just minding its own business.

We all have our own ideas of fame, and maybe in the final accounting all ways are legitimate, but two that never appealed to us as mattering much are flagpole-sitting and going over Niagara Falls in a barrel.

"WHERE'S EMILY?"

by CAROLYN WELLS

CHAPTER XXX.

But Sayre had a fine sense of the courtesy due a party invited to Knollwood, and he proposed that so far as it lay in his power he would keep up the dignity of the place and its traditions of hospitality.

Aunt Judy was not enough to offer to the guests, they must have every responsible member of the family available.

And a sort of noblesse oblige made Rodney feel that he must stand as representative of the family and the house with which he expected to be affiliated.

So he had steeled himself to this ordeal, and proposed to carry it through at any cost to his own feelings or nerves.

It would be idle to say that Hilldale was not stirred to its foundations by the tragic occurrences. They might go calmly to the church, politely to call at Knollwood, sedately leave cards at The Ravines, silently attend the inquest, but at home, behind closed doors, human nature forced itself to the front and speculation was rife, while theories were plentiful as blackberries.

Opinions ran the whole gamut of possibilities, from the martyrdom of Emily to her blackest guilt. From a pitched battle between the two high-tempered friends to the onslaught of a carload of bandits terrible as any army with banners.

But these conversations came not to the ears of the Knollwood people, for Hilldale was discreet before all else, and its attitude was entirely that of sympathy and condolence, with a due admixture of hope.

And so, the wedding party took place.

Determination on the part of all the household made it seem a mere reception or fete, without bridal significance.

At noon, as Emily had not returned, Aunt Judy took her place as receiving hostess and greeted the inrush of guests with a smile.

No explanations were needed, they all understood. Hilldale was quick to take a cue, and their murmured greetings were befitting and pleasant.

Spinks was in his element. Often he had engineered a wedding, but never one like this, which, lacking bridal party entirely, was left to him to save from ignominious disaster.

And he did his part. He ordered the feast served at the psychological moment. He ordained the music of the right sort and at the right time. He planned the dancing, having removed the white stanchions with their great sheaves of lilies, which, incidentally he ordered sent to the hospital, in accordance with Hilldale traditions.

He himself conducted dowagers to the present room, and elderly gentlemen to Aunt Judy's sitting room, which had been converted into a refreshing sort of place.

And so, as Spinks, with his staff, looked after all this, Aunt Judy and Rod were free to entertain the guests and they did themselves proud.

Rodney was grave, but politely smiling, and of such courtesy and charm that the hearts of the women went out to him and one and all sought to offer comfort.

This Sayre accepted in the most friendly way, and even the most critical of the guests finally concluded that the Knollwood people had done the best thing after all.

Aunt Judy was pathetic, yet in such a gracious, dignified way that few dared pity her.

Her attitude, like Rod's, was that Emily was mysteriously absent, and they were sorry, but nothing could be done about it at the moment.

And, after all, that was the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth.

And so the afternoon wore on. The elder people went home, but the younger crowd, having good music and good food, stayed on and on, and Aunt Judy was glad they did.

Reaction would come soon enough and she wanted Emily's friends to have a good time.

Abel Collins came to talk to her. "You're a wonderful woman," he said. "Few could have accomplished this."

"I had to," she returned simply. "I did it for Emily. Tell, me, Abel, where do you think the child is?"

Abel Collins looked at her sharply. He feared this meant the end of enforced control of herself, and possibly a collapse.

"No," she said, reading his glance, "I'm not going to give way. Why should I? All I can possibly do to help Emily is to—keep the home fires burning. If she comes home, she must find everything in perfect order, and, if she doesn't, there's no harm done."

"You're right, you're right," Abel Collins assured her. "Now, as to where our girl is, I don't know. But I do think, Judy, that she will yet be rescued."

"You're not saying that just to comfort me?"

"Partly," he smiled. "And partly because I believe it myself. If Emily were dead, her body would have been found by this time. If she has been kidnaped, we will hear from the villains, and probably soon. Dear friend, there is nothing to do but to wait—the hardest thing, I know, but the only thing."

To Rodney Sayre, Collins said practically the same thing. It was no news to either, but there was something about Abel Collins' way of saying things that brought a hint of hope and a breath of cheer to the two sorrowing hearts.

Then Abel and Rodney took a walk about the place, passing beyond the lawns and on toward the footpath that led to the big ravine.

They talked for the most part on desultory topics, not avoiding the subject close to both their hearts, but feeling there was little to be said about it.

They passed the Miller house, and spoke of its beauty and grandeur.

"Pennington's will be shut up, too, for a time," said Abel, looking at the Miller's boarded-up windows. "I say, Sayre, let's drop in on Jim for a minute. He must be pretty blue this afternoon."

"All right," Rodney agreed, and they went on over the little ravine and up the hill to the house.

Although a steep hill, curves and windings made the ascent easy as well as picturesque, and before they were halfway up, the treetops were below them and their view of the road was cut off.

The house, as they neared it, looked as usual, except that one or two trunks and a large suitcase were on the front veranda.

Hearing voices, Jim Pennington himself came to the open front door. He was in his shirt sleeves, but made no apologies.

"How are you?" he said, to Rodney, holding out his hand, and afterward greeting Collins. "I'm downright glad to see you. Sit down, I'll get you a bracer. I need one myself. Not that I've been working hard, my packing was easy, but——" he shrugged his shoulders and it was not hard to understand that the nerve strain of leaving his home was what had wearied him.

They sat in his pleasant living-room, every detail of which told of a woman's taste and fancies.

"I thought at first," he said, "I'd take with me everything connected with Polly—her pictures, books, music—but, Lord, it would take a van. Then I concluded to take nothing remindful of her, thought it might be better for me, but, of course, that wouldn't work either. So I'm doing what anybody would do in the circumstances, taking some things and leaving some."

"You're coming back?" said Sayre.

"Oh, yes. Excuse me just a moment," he stepped to a table, opened the drawer and disappeared from the room for a moment, then returned.

"Something I forgot to tell Rosa," he said. "Yes, I shall return, and probably soon. I thought at first I'd go away for good, but Hilldale seems like home to me, and I'm sure now I'll come back here. In fact, I don't know what I'll do until I get away and think it out. You don't know what it means to a chap who has had a home so long to suddenly find himself homeless. And I can't stay on here. These two days have nearly finished me. Everything reminds me of Polly. The very chairs and tables shriek her name at me, and I can't stand it. I'm nervous, I know, but I can't help that. So I shall go away, probably to Europe, or maybe California, but far away for a time, a few months, and then I'll come back here and sell the house or live in it, I don't know which. But I can't rent it now, or anything like that, for I would have to put away all of Polly's things, and I can't."

"I think you're doing just right, Jim," Sayre told him. "Go off as you propose, and later, you'll get a better perspective, and you'll be ready to take up your life again. Me, I don't know where I'm at."

"Of course, you don't," and Pennington spoke with utmost sympathy. "I don't see what you are going to do, Sayre. Did you get the detective you had in mind?"

"Stone? I hope to get him. I don't know for certain yet. I think now it's a case of kidnaping and I'm expecting the ransom letter any hour."

"It may be," and Pennington looked thoughtful. "I hope the police won't harp any more on the fact of the fur and the diamonds being found beside Polly."

"They will, though," Abel Collins put in. "And since that has been touched on, how do you explain it, Mr. Pennington?"

"I'd rather not pursue the subject, Mr. Collins."

"Why not?" asked Rodney. "Look here, Pennington, if you know anything, out with it. You're going away——"

"Well, that may be a good thing for you all."

"I don't want a good thing for anybody. I want the truth."

DR. COPELAND SAYS—

Severe Sunburn May Lead To More Serious Trouble

—Take Summer Tan in Moderate Doses

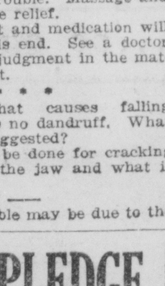
WARNS DR. COPELAND

Accustom Your Skin Gradually to the Beneficial Rays of the Sun, Don't Overdo It, Says Authority, for in Addition to Burns Disorders May Result

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D.
United States Senator from New York.
Former Commissioner of Health, New York City.

WE are now in the midst of vacation time. Most of us are able to spend more than our usual time in the sunshine. Of course this is to be desired. Very few, especially among city dwellers, spend enough time in the sunshine.



But we must exercise care so that the skin is not severely burned by being exposed for too long a time at first. Pretty soon your skin will adapt itself to the sunlight. Last season many young women suffered greatly due to their desire to acquire the fashionable suntan.

Not long ago I read a fashion note which stated that the backless dresses which were so popular last year would probably be less in demand. This is probably because of the suffering experienced by many women who tried to tan the skin in too short a time.

But if you do desire a tanned skin, begin temperately. If you are light complexioned you must be especially careful in order to avoid a red, unsightly looking skin.

The results of sunburn may be much more serious than the irritation of the skin. There may be fever and considerable constitutional disturbance following a severe sunburn. As a result, your efficiency will be lowered for several days.

But if you are not seeking a deeply tanned skin, or if your skin is easily irritated, take pains for a few days and avoid trouble. It is a good plan to wear a broad-brimmed hat. Even a thin veil gives a lot of protection.

Quinine applied locally is useful. It may be prepared as a powder—one part to fifteen parts of talcum powder—and dusted on the skin. Or the quinine may be dissolved in petroleum oil and applied to exposed surfaces.

Cold cream may be used to prevent burning, also it is soothing if the skin has been burned. Do not wash after exposure to the sun. After a drive, or a half day or more on the beach, cleanse the skin with cold cream, rubbing it off gently with a soft cloth.

Whether or not you want to be tanned, accustom yourself to the sunlight because you need its healthful effect. Sunlight kills germs, enriches the blood and has a tonic effect.

Answers to Health Queries

A. E. F. Q.—I am 16 years of age, 5 ft. 10 in. tall—will I grow taller? Is there any way in which I can stop this rapid growth?

A.—You may have attained your full height, but in most cases the growth and development continue until the age of 21. There is no way to stop growing. As you grow older you will fill out and develop generally.

* * *

H. H. Q.—When I walk my knee and ankle joints make a loud crackling noise; sometimes they're painful. What can I do for it?

2. What will strengthen a weak heart?

A.—This is due to a lack of synovial fluid around the joints. There may be a rheumatic tendency at the source of the trouble. Massage and heat should give relief.

2. Proper rest and medication will help toward this end. See a doctor and follow his judgment in the matter of treatment.

* * *

A. A. Q.—What causes falling hair? There is no dandruff. What treatment is suggested?

2. What can be done for cracking or popping of the jaw and what is the cause?

A.—The trouble may be due to the health in general. Improve that and you will probably notice general results. In the meantime keep the hair and scalp immaculately clean, and use a good hair tonic.

2. This disturbance is usually due to improperly constructed dental work or to trouble with the teeth themselves. The loss of teeth often throws the jaw out of proper position. Massaging with warm cod liver oil should give relief until the cause is determined and further treatment advised.

* * *

T. B. H. Q.—How can superfluous hair be removed? Is there any chance of scarring?

2—Do you ever get over a nervous breakdown?

3—What do you advise for headaches?

A.—When the electric needle is properly used there is little danger of scarring the skin, but it must be employed by an expert. Consult a skin specialist.

2—Yes. But it takes time and careful attention to the health in general.

3—A thorough examination and a complete eye test will usually locate the source of the trouble. Eye strain, infected teeth, tonsils and sinuses, constipation, indigestion, kidney conditions or nasal catarrh may all be responsible.

WOULD PLEDGE CONGRESSMEN TO OBEY LAW

Oklahoma Man Campaigning For Oath of Office Naming Amendment.

WASHINGTON, July 16 — A summer campaign for a new Congressional oath of office, pledging members to personal obedience of the eighteenth amendment is under way today by Representative U. S. Stone (R) of Oklahoma.

Already petitions for enactment of Stone's proposal are being circulated by many local branches of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, and ardent drys in many sections of the country have demanded their representatives in Congress to support it.

Like the movement started by Senator Sheppard (D) of Texas to make the buyer of liquor equally guilty with the seller, the Stone campaign is getting under way slowly.

But the Oklahoma member is certain that in the end he will mobilize a sentiment which will make his bill for a new oath fully as live an issue as the Sheppard proposal.

ANNOUNCES PLAN

Announcing his plan of action in an after-the-session issue of the Congressional Record, Stone said:

"The present oath was adopted before the eighteenth amendment became a part of the Constitution. Those who have little respect for the Constitution and laws of this country and who have practically no respect for the Eighteenth Amendment, do not feel bound by the present oath.

"The oath of office as at present administered is so general that it is not strictly observed and especially with reference to additional amendments which are now a part of the constitution."

Stone, who is a first termer in Congress, says his eyes were opened when he came to Washington.

"I especially wish to direct your attention to those who are being elected to office by the dry forces in this country and who vote dry but who are personally wet," he said.

"This has been brought to my attention very forceably since I have been in Washington, as I find those who parade as drys at home are very wet in Washington, D. C.

CHANGE CONDUCT

"They vote dry for public record, but in private life there is some reason to question their conduct.

"When I arrived in Washington and took over the duties of Congressman I was assigned to an office in the House Office Building, and the first act of my secretary was to wash the stickers off the large mirror which in bold letters advertises to the world a well-known brand of whiskey, a special advertised brand of gin, and an internationally known brand of brandy.

Theatres

AT THE CLIFTONA

"The Devil's Holiday," Nancy Carroll's latest starring picture, which comes to the Cliftona theatre on Wednesday, is a typical American play of modern life.

Written by Edmund Goulding, whose penchant for poignant drama is already well-established in the field of superlative movie productions, the play's action is centered in the approximate heart of the United States, namely in the middle of the great wheat-farming belt.

"The Devil's Holiday" is a study in the comparative characters of those who live in the big urban centers of the Middle West and those who gain their livelihood from the rich farmlands nearby.

Miss Carroll is the gold-digging manicurist in a big hotel who connives with crafty salesmen in "persuading" ranchers to purchase their wares. Miss Carroll vamps the business prospects from the wheat fields, gets them "that way" about her, and then the salesmen step in and highhand the deal for the sale of farm implements, tractors and other commodities.

Her game is on the "up-and-up," but it is far from straightforward. Thus engaged in amassing a fortune for herself, she meets Phillips Holmes, son of Hobart Bosworth, one of the wealthiest ranchers in the wheat country. Holmes' utter naivete captures Nancy's fancy, and she is about to toss over her "con" game for an honest love match with Holmes when James Kirkwood, his stern older brother, steps in and brands her as a fakir who has put a love-spell on Phillips in order to marry him and get some of Bosworth's riches.

The play then sweeps through a number of high-powered emotional sequences to a powerful climax.

AT THE METROPOLITAN

When George Duryea was signed for the part of the handsome young ranch hand in "Pardon My Gun," Pathe's romantic western comedy, he stepped into the part with unusual ease.

Unlike many western screen heroes, Duryea is as much at home in the saddle as he is behind the wheel of his sport roadster. In his late teens he spent four years riding the range to regain the health he had lost while applying himself too closely to his college studies in New York.

Following his western experience, Duryea returned to New York where he embarked upon a stage career. Strange to say, he was not cast for two-gun roles, but instead, specialized in dress parts. His first screen role was that of the young reform school inmate in Cecil B. DeMille's "The Godless Girl."

AT THE GRAND

The picture is Miss Murray's first all-talkie and tells of the adventures of a dancer who was misunderstood. It is a sophisticated story of smart people.

The sixth chapter of "The Jade Box" is also on the program.

Cheer up. If Russian Communism is doing as well as it says, before long Russia will be lending money to all the rest of the world, and then the world will hate Russia instead of us.

KILLING WEEDS THROUGH SPRAYS

In Spite of Dry Weather, Noxious Weeds Survive, Compete With Pasture.

In spite of the dry weather a number of noxious weeds have survived and are competing with pasture and meadow grasses. July and August are the months best suited to the destruction of most of these weeds Sodium Chlorate has given very satisfactory results in combating weeds. Calcium Chlorate is proving even more satisfactory, because it does not carry the fire hazard which must be guarded against in the use of Sodium Chlorate.

Canadian Thistle should be sprayed thoroughly when in full bloom. Then respray a few weeks later to get the remaining shoots and through this plan, large patches of Canadian Thistles have been completely eradicated

Quack grass, poison ivy, and pea vines when thoroughly, sprayed have been very satisfactorily eradicated through the use of this spray.

Dandelion and horse nettle are more resistant and frequent sprays are necessary to kill the shoots which appear a few weeks following the application of this spray which destroys the foliage of the plant at the time of spraying

Sodium Chlorate is used at the rate of one pound per gallon of water. The dry material dissolves readily. Any type of sprayer may be used in making the application. Sprinkling cans may be used for small areas, although it is very wasteful of the material. Calcium Chlorate may be dissolved in the same way and used at the rate of one pound per gallon of water. In using Sodium Chlorate, be careful about getting it on your clothing. Store it in tight metal or glass containers Keep it away from the children Wear rubber boots while spraying In following these precautions and the instructions for spraying, a number of farmers are getting very satisfactory results in weed control
